Earth Educators’ Rendezvous

The Earth Educators’ Rendezvous is a five-day event that takes place each summer in different locations across the country. The conference brings together more than 400 researchers and practitioners working in all aspects of undergraduate Earth education, including a mix of college faculty, graduate students, and K-12 teachers from all disciplines who are interested in teaching and learning about the Earth. The conference program is designed to appeal to everyone from the instructor attending their first Earth education-themed meeting, to experienced STEM education researchers, to administrators who want to better support students in their programs.

Conference Structure

The Earth Educators' Rendezvous offers a rich tapestry of interactive workshops, contributed talks and posters, panel discussions, plenary sessions, and working groups. Drawing across the work currently taking place in geoscience, environmental, and sustainability education, meeting attendees will have the opportunity to learn about new teaching approaches, discover opportunities to get involved in research programs, prepare for an academic career, discuss how to approach teaching and learning challenges in their classroom, and more. The formal program will end each day with either a plenary speaker or poster session, providing an opportunity to hear from experts who bring to light new ways of thinking about Earth related topics, ways of teaching, and interdisciplinary perspectives on the topic.
