DEVOTED TO A BETTER PLANET?

Become a leader with the Global Network for Geoscience and Society

The Leadership Position

The Global Network for Geoscience and Society (GNGS) seeks highly responsible and motivated students for a unique opportunity to sit on its Steering Committee. Successful applicants will gain leadership skills working with professionals from a variety of sectors, expand their organizational, management and collaborative skills, develop and implement original ideas, and work to contribute to the overall mission of GNGS.

Opportunities
1) Research and investigate critical issues
2) Teach and mentor other students
3) Apply learning and interest in geoscience education to community-based projects
4) Learn about career opportunities
5) Develop networks
6) Participate in publications

What is the Global Network for Geoscience and Society?

A network that will provide an opportunity for geoscientists across the globe to share their knowledge and experience to assist others in advancing resilience and sustainability at the grassroots level.

Mission

Our mission is to support the global geoscience community in advancing resilience and sustainability following the UN’s Sustainable Development Goals. We will highlight the role of geoscience in addressing societal challenges, bridge the gap between geoscientists and other communities, and serve the public good by addressing the challenges that lie at the interface of science and public policy.

How to Apply

Applications will be accepted on a rolling basis and reviewed starting on March 1, 2022. Please submit application materials (cover letter, personal statement, resume, and two letters of recommendation) and any questions to info@thegngs.org.

Application details

Cover letter should include: name, school, areas of interest, applicable skills and research experience (if applicable).

Personal statement should not exceed 500 words, and should explain your interest in the position, outline why applied geosciences are important to you, and include a statement of how much time you are able to devote.

Letters of reference should be emailed directly to info@thegngs.org with the subject line indicating a letter of reference and your name. For example: Smith-Letter of reference.